

Ms Salinia Stroux studied social anthropology, geography and Latin America Studies at the university of Hamburg. Her postgraduate research was about informal street vending as survival entrepreneurship of asylum seekers in Greece.

Her research interests are migration, borders, political ecology and visual anthropology. She is also involved in photography, documentary film and new media communication. Recently she works on a networking and educational project concerning internet blogging of young refugees that aims at their self-organization and self-empowerment within Europe.

She has worked in educational programs for refugees and immigrants in Germany and in Greece and was coordinator of the reception centre of unaccompanied minors on the island Lesbos from 2008 till 2009. Since 2004 she works as a freelancer journalist and photo-reporter.

The mother tongues of Salinia are German and Greek, she is a native speaker in English and Persian and speaks basic French and Spanish.